You can judge the quality of the flour by the appearance of the sack—if the sack bears the names

"Peerless" and "Hardesty"

These two names are a guarantee that the flour is of the highest quality which can be produced. PEERLESS FLOUR is milled from selected wheat, for which a premium is paid. By a wonderful system of separation, only the most palatable and nutritious elements of the wheat find their way into PEERLESS FLOUR.

Woodward's New Point

NEW EMBROIDERY ORGANDY GOWN.

BY ANNE RITTENHOUSE.

Special Correspondence of The Star.
NEW YORK, April 6.—There is a woman over in France named Elise Poret, who started in to make undergarments and who is now famous for her lingerie frocks.

Most of the French designers will make lingerie and they are constantly designing new models, the greatest of them not holding herself above the invention of an exquisite chemise. Several of the designers of gowns have risen from the ranks of those who make nothing but lingerie. Poret is one of these. She is the smart choice of a trousseau for the most dressee European woman, and now Americans have learned to know a good deal about her, especially through her handling of thin, washable materials for frocks.

She is a pastmistress of the art of making organdy, mull, batiste, net, lace and chiffon into consumer garments that cannot be imitated except by the most skillful of needleworkers. Suddenly and with little warning, the well known assembling of colors and fabrics, or who thought that such a frock was the real man-compelling creation in costume. But these days are not those days. Our women, young and old, no longer look upon the allure of the orient with shocked or indifferent eyes; they adopt it with eagerness, and even with the present wave of 1910 styles, they manage to impart to them much of the softness of a missette in "Boheme."

Poret's they will give to the organdy and batiste frocks of the spring that same air of sophistication that has accompanied all their frocks for the last five years. We shall see, for the muslin frock of the romantic heroine is about to be launched with vigor, as they care nothing for styles, new or old, these days. It is, therefore, natural that the makers of exquisite lingerie clothes should come into their own, and that the American buyers should see the chance of offering French needlework in its best form to the large number of women who must, through the perversity of the climate, wear thin clothes for six months of the year.

Such frocks have been sent over, and one of the best is by Elise Poret, a day for thin white frocks has arrived. France makes these materials better than any other nation, but she never shows any particular inclination for wearing such garments. Her summer climate is almost as hot as ours, quite so in spots; yet any woman who appeared in the streets, even in the morning with a wash muslin gown on would be looked at with reproachful glances and perhaps ridicule, if she went in the Rue de la Paix or the Place Vendome, where the millinettes roam the streets during their lunch hour.

Organdy and Roses.
The combination of organdy, pink roses and colored ribbon does not even suggest the modern movement in clothes. One's mind runs back to the days of most romantic fiction, when heroines were compelled to wear these gowns by the author, who probably knew nothing about the fashions of the hour and always fell back upon this gown of white organdy, of pink roses, and of ribbon, which is a sort of enchanting touches that the woman in the summer likes to incorporate into the monotony of her white evening gowns.

Long Sleeves, Low Neck.
The skirt is immensely full, and the embroidered net is inlaid, the design being quite simple, but effective. There are straight rows of insertion going down the skirt, and small pieces, geometrically arranged, going around the hips to simulate a yoke.

The bodice is closely drawn about the figure, the top part looking like a series of wide bretelles which have dropped down on the arms. The sleeves, however, show decided novelty. They are long, with deep cuffs, such as were worn in the middle ages; the flaring upper edge caught with a pink rose. No, the frock will not wash. There is no need to ask the question.

WOOLEN THINGS FOR THE BABY'S LAYETTE

There is true economy in making the woollen things that are needed in a baby's layette. The fact that these garments have to be washed frequently, and that they have to come in contact with the sensitive skin of the baby, makes it necessary to use none but the finest and best selected wools. And the cheapest way to secure this, especially if the maker has leisure, is to make them at home.

The hand is still deemed an essential by most people for a baby's layette, and two or three of these knitted by hand from saxon yarn will answer the purpose. They may be either knitted in ribbed stitch, or crocheted in what is known as slip stitch. Tabs back and front of the bottom of the bands are usually added, and sometimes tiny shoulder straps as well.

Long-sleeved shirts for babies can be knitted without much difficulty. In selecting a pattern to follow for these, it is well to choose the one that opens in front, as this is easier to slip on and off. In slip stitch little shirts can also be crocheted, and these are somewhat easier to make than those wrought on knitting pins.

Some of the common patterns for infants' knitted and crocheted boots are much too heavy. Nowadays mothers realize the absurdity of building up the baby's feet, which are always protected by skirts and petticoats. So don't be tempted to put those very attractive woollen ankara booties on the baby still in long clothes. The best sort of home-made foot coverings for the baby is made of the finest quality of yarn in a fairly open stitch. Little slipper jackets are always acceptable, but care should be taken to select a kind that does not require many bows. A small ribbon drawing around the neck is quite enough trimming for such a jacket. The neck-band should be large and the sleeves should have ample room to slip on over the baby's dress without causing constriction.

For winter wear the baby caps, either knitted or crocheted, are exceedingly desirable. Here again there is no reason to burden them with ribbon bows, which are all too apt to become mussed and soiled, and which cannot be restored by washing, as can the caps. Woollen caps should always be lined with silk or fine muslin.

Afghans and baby blankets can also be made. Like other things for babies, the simplest are the better. For a solid baby finery is more repulsive than any other soiled finery. Those of soft wools in white, pink or blue do not clean so well as pink, perhaps—made in a pretty stitch—but without much scalloping and rosettes and bows, are the best sort to choose.

WEAK, AILING CHILDREN

Made Well and Strong by Simple Remedy.

Here is another letter from a mother who has just come to our attention, showing the power of Vinol to build up health and strength for weak, puny, ailing children.

W. A. Smith of Shanesville, Ohio, says: "My little child was puny, weak and ailing, could not rest at night and would not eat. I learned about Vinol and tried it, and within a week noticed an improvement. The child's appetite improved, it slept well, strength and health were soon built up. We think Vinol is excellent for weak, puny children."

Vinol is a delicious cod liver and iron tonic without oil, containing beef penicillin, which creates an appetite, tones up the digestive organs, enriches the blood and creates strength. It is a simple, safe, and effective remedy for all weak, ailing children.

We ask all parents of weak, ailing, delicate children in this vicinity to try Vinol. It is a simple, safe, and effective remedy for all weak, ailing children. We will return your money if it fails to benefit your little ones.

P. S.—In your own town, wherever you live, there is a Vinol Drug Store. Look for the sign—Advertisement.

The Young Girl's Hair.

It is quite possible to brush the hair too much, but few young girls are given to the fault. The use of the brush twice a day for five minutes each time is most beneficial, encouraging the growth of the hair, cleansing it of dust and promoting the gloss, which is the fairest feature of the hair. But this brushing must be done gently, with smooth, slow, downward strokes and without snapping away the brush suddenly when the ends of the hairs are reached. It is jerky brushing that is injurious to the hair, breaking it off and even severing it from the follicle. The hair does not drop out, especially in winter, though growth is somewhat impeded with cold; the slight shedding manifested in the combings is a natural process, fulfilling the law of the survival of the strongest. The loosened and broken hairs drop in this manner and a new crop of young hairs take their place.

Regarding the influence of the hands on the beauty and health of the hair there is nothing more rewarding, provided the locks and scalp are treated tenderly. The hair loves to be caressed, and the heat and magnetism of the fingers, when they are used in the way of massage, exert the most wonderful influence upon it. Massage of the scalp what physical culture is to the body. It promotes the growth of the hair by exciting to new activity the tiny glands which contribute to the structure, and also tones up the scalp layers, which, with neglect, relax unhealthily. The circulation of the scalp is also increased, thus preventing atrophy of the hair roots and the grayness which results from it.

"No valuable, in fact, is massage for young and old," says an authority on the subject. "that when properly understood and appreciated we shall see fewer bald heads and a vastly higher average of beautiful abundant tresses than we do now."

Any girl can massage her own scalp with ease if she only gives the time to it which is needed. Use the balls of the fingers only, keeping the thumb firm against the head and moving the tips of the fingers in a circular manner. After the whole head has been gone over in this fashion, use the fingers of the two hands at the same time for sliding the scalp this way and that, doing this in a brisk, vibratory manner. This proceeding is for loosening the scalp, for when it gets tight the hair growth is arrested and the health and beauty of the locks affected.

LITTLE STORIES OF BEDTIME

The Hunt for Mr. Quack.

In spite of her hopelessness in regard to Mr. Quack, and the fact that Mrs. Quack felt better after she had eaten the corn left among the rushes of the Smiling Pool by Farmer Brown's Boy. Now that her stomach was full and she had that very comfortable feeling that goes with a full stomach, she could think better. As the Black Shadows crept across the Smiling Pool she turned over in her mind Sammy Jay's plan for helping her the next day. The more she thought about it the better it seemed, and she began to feel a little ashamed that she had not appeared more grateful to Sammy when he told her about it. Then, she had been tired and hungry and discouraged. Now she was beginning to feel rested, and she had a full stomach. These things made all the difference in the world. As she thought over Sammy's plan she began to feel a little hope, and when at last she put her head under a wing to go to sleep she had made up her mind that the plan was worth trying and that she would do her part.

EARLY THE NEXT MORNING SAMMY JAY AND BLACKY WERE IN THE BIG HICKORY TREE NEAR THE SMILING POOL.

Bright and early the next morning Sammy Jay and Blacky the Crow were in the Big Hickory Tree near the Smiling Pool, ready to start for the Big River to hunt for Mr. Quack. Peter Rabbit had been so afraid that he would miss something that he had stayed near the Smiling Pool all night, so he was on hand to see the start.

It had been agreed that Blacky Quack was to go to a certain place on the Big River and then swim up as far as she could. Quack it would be of any use. She was to stay in the middle of the river, where she would be safe from the hunters with terrible guns, and where also these same hunters would be sure to see her, and so not be tempted to shoot at Blacky the Crow if he happened to fly over them. You see, they would not risk frightening her by shooting at Blacky.

When Mrs. Blacky had finished breakfast she started for the Big River, and her stout wings moved so swiftly that they made a whistling sound. Sammy Jay and Blacky the Crow followed her, but though they flew as fast as they could Mrs. Quack had reached the Big River before they were half way there. When they did get there they saw Mrs. Quack out in the middle swimming about watching for them. Blacky flew across to the further bank and pretended to be hunting for food along the bank, just as every hunter knows he often does. Sammy did the same thing on the other bank.

Mrs. Quack swam slowly up the Big River, keeping in the middle, and Blacky and Sammy followed along up the two banks, all the time using their sharp eyes for all they were worth to find Mr. Quack hiding among the broken-down rushes or under the bushes in the water, for the Big River had overflowed its banks, and in some places bushes and trees were in the water.

Now, Sammy Jay dearly loves to hunt for things. Whenever he knows that one of his neighbors in the Green Forest has hidden something he likes to hunt for it. It isn't so much that he wants what has been hidden as it is that he wants to feel that he is smart enough to find it. When he does find it he usually steals it, I'm sorry to say. But it is the fun of hunting for it that Sammy enjoys most. So Sammy thoroughly enjoyed hunting for Mr. Quack. He peered into every likely hiding place, and got so interested that he quite forgot about the hunters who might be hiding along the bank.

So it happened that he didn't see a boat drawn in among the bushes until he was right over it. Sitting in it was a man with a terrible gun, very intently watching Mrs. Quack out in the middle of the Big River. Sammy was so startled that before he thought he opened his mouth and screamed "Thief! Thief! Thief!" at the top of his lungs, and then flew away with all his might. Mrs. Quack heard the scream and understood just what it meant.

A little later Blacky the Crow discovered another hunter hiding behind the bushes on his side. "Caw! Caw! Caw!" shouted Blacky, flying out over the water far enough to be safe from that terrible gun she could see. "Quack! Quack!" replied Mrs. Quack, which meant that she understood. And so the hunt went on without a sign of poor Mr. Quack.
